

Curriculum Vitae

Caroline Biedermann

Carolin Biedermann is communication as well as environmental scientist.

She initially studied Communication and Media, Business Economics and Theater. Several years she worked in media research and film production.

From 2005 to 2011 she worked as a project developer and manager at an independent film production company. Her focus was on nature and science documentaries for public television.

In the course of a part-time Master's program in Environmental Protection she came to ZALF. Here she wrote her master's thesis "Initiation and implementation of financial incentives to reward ecosystem services", in which she dealt extensively with Payments for Ecosystem Services (PES) in Germany and the USA.

Since then she deals with voluntary non-governmental PES and focuses in her PhD-thesis on the communication of private payments for nature conservation and ecosystem services.
